Classroom Use Policy – University Library

The Library classrooms are designated for the delivery of library instruction and may be reserved by library employees to provide instruction and training sessions. These sessions have priority over all other uses of the rooms. When sessions are not held in Classroom 1, the computers may be used by Georgia State University students when other student computers in the library are not available. Classroom 2 is not available for overflow use.

While library instruction always has priority use of the classrooms, during non-peak times university offices may schedule the rooms for orientation or other student-related meetings at the discretion of the Instruction Coordinator.
